This workshop focuses on presenting research based content to an English speaking audience in an international classroom setting. We will consider the requirements when speaking to student groups with the same/ differing scopes of expertise. Subsequently, we will look at the amount and complexity of information you can provide within a narrow time slot, what to focus on and how to outline your talk – especially when presenting to learners with limited English skills.

As globally oriented higher education is strongly influenced by an Anglo-American communication style, we will look in detail at presentation methods and linguistic devices used by Anglo-American speakers.

Another major topic of this seminar will be attention strategies to keep your students interested and facilitate engagement within class. Therefore, we'll employ lots of different exercises such as video analysis, simplifying written content, Webscape Karaoke, three-minute presentation and many more. However, this seminar is not a language class! English level B2/C1 is required to participate. Expect a highly active seminar with lots of opportunities to practise.
